Speaking of Tasly's Chinese Dripping pills...I did some research.

The Shenyi Center of Medicine said Tasly's Dripping Pills are made from red sage and are used to activate stagnant blood and to invigorate your Qi or energy.

Dripping Pills are widely used for "the treatment of cardiovascular diseases including chest pain, heart problems and heart attacks, ischemic stroke and myocarditis, inflammation of heart, stagnation of blood. It has an instant effect like nitroglycerin for cardiovascular diseases. Providing blood circulation improvement, Danshen pills also have immune enhancing properties.

Take it when you have heart pain or for strong healthy heart and normal blood flow at any age."

Shenyi goes on to say, "In addition it is effective for dyslipidemia, blood hyperviscosity syndrome, peripheral angiopathy (superficial thrombophlebitis, venous thrombosis, allergic arteriolitis), pneumocardial disease, diabetes mellitus, progressive hyperosteoegeny, cirrhosis and it is also used for altitude sickness. Danshen has been used for menstrual problems, to treat hepatitis, and to relieve bruising and to aid in granulation."

Everything from coronary issues and stagnant blood to cirrhosis, menstrual problems, altitude sickness and an invigorated Qi...who would have thought red sage could be so useful.

But, will it relieve road rage?
